

Legal & Compliance Guidelines Overview

The information in these legal and compliance production guidelines (“Guidelines”) is provided to summarize certain key YouTube policies only. It is not intended to be exhaustive, does not constitute legal advice, and does not relieve Producer of its contractual obligations (including to indemnify YouTube and to obtain all necessary rights) or its obligations to comply with all applicable laws, rules and regulations in all relevant jurisdictions (“Laws”). Producer and its Production Counsel (as defined in these Guidelines) must immediately inform YouTube Legal if they believe any of these guidelines conflict with those obligations.

In the event of a conflict or inconsistency between these guidelines and the applicable agreement between Google and Producer (the “Agreement”), the Agreement will control.

These Guidelines do not cover all of the situations that may arise in connection with any particular production. Producer must monitor all stages of production to ensure that the program and other deliverables contain no material that could give rise to a third party claim or violation of Laws. In the event that a situation arises that is not covered by these Guidelines, or if you receive notification of a third party claim with respect to your production, consult your Production Counsel.

These Guidelines are subject to change at any time, and Producers are expected to comply with any new or different policies as communicated to them by YouTube (including by posting at this URL). To the extent relevant, references in these Guidelines to “Producer” are deemed to include anyone acting on behalf of the party contracting with Google (referred to as “Provider” in the “Agreement”) or used by that entity to meet its obligations under the Agreement (e.g., third-party production companies, subcontractors, payroll vendors). Producer must ensure that all such parties act in accordance with the Agreement and with these Guidelines.

References in these Guidelines to “Google” and “YouTube” as a company include Google LLC and its relevant affiliates.
